Mark:

The water well was not destroyed by well standards. It's possible that there was no way to get the concrete out. I don't know the site condition. Also, maybe the person thought this destruction was good enough. Most brick lined wells are generally about 40 ft. in depth or less. I have never seen one deeper than that in our County, but SF did have one to 80 ft. in depth, but I think that is a really rare one. I guess Zone 7 at the time made the call. No permits or information found on the these monitoring wells for destruction in my database. Just the well construction (see below of my data base). No well ID also and I have 4 monitoring wells listed in the database (the site map from 1991 show only three). The water well that was also destroyed has a State well number of 1S/4W-26N4. This is what I have in my database, but I have no actual well logs or physical copies of the permit.

Great bit of sleuthing! But interesting well destruction, it doesn't quite conform to CA well destruction standards!

Any sign of the destruction of three monitoring wells??

Hi Mark:

I believe I have found your well. It was destroyed in 1991 under permit 91351 (see attached PDF).

Let me know if you have any questions.

James,

At one time there were three groundwater monitoring wells at this site, as well as a 6-inch diameter water supply well. The site has been redeveloped but we have no knowledge of the status of the wells. Did they pull well destruction permits at some point? My guess is the site would have been redeveloped between 1992 and 2010 (how's that for narrowing it down!; probably closer to the 1995 time range, if it helps...) Speed helps with this one.

Thanks,
