OUR HISTORY

Economy Lumber History

Since opening its doors to the building contractor trade in 1935, Economy Lumber has grown steadily along with the entire San Francisco Bay area.

South City Lumber and Supply of South San Francisco and San Mateo Lumber on the Peninsula, both dating back to the late 1800s have been part of John W. Bacon Sr's San Francisco Lumber Company since 1968 and 1974 respectively. Economy Lumber Company became a division of San Francisco Lumber in 1975.

In 1983 John Bacon Jr., President and Brian Ettlin, General Manager, assumed management of Economy Lumber, then located at San Leandro street in Oakland, and directed their efforts to support the professional building trade in the San Francisco Bay Area. Economy Lumber moved to its current site in 1992.

Economy Lumber Company, on its 7-acre complex, has slowly captured a major market share in the competitive East Bay Area marketplace, and they now stand alone as Oakland's only privately-owned single-site professional lumber and building material provider. From a handful in 1975 to now approaching 60 employees, Economy Lumber Company serves its customers with knowledgeable, experienced, long-term employees.

Economy Lumber Company and its employees are also actively involved in the wellbeing and development of the community in which it resides. Oakland's diverse population is generously reflected on the faces and the variety of spoken languages of our employees.
